A high command communiqué also said fighter planes and helicopter gunships raided Iranian positions and military targets in the southern and central sectors, scoring direct hits and inflicting heavy losses in men and equipment. Later Tehran Radio said Iranian artillery pounded Iraqi positions on the Shatt Al-Arab waterway in southern Iraq, killing 15 Iraqi soldiers and destroying military targets.

Ceausescu calls for M.E. settlement

VIENNA (R) — Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu and Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) leader Yasser Arafat called Saturday for intensified diplomatic action to solve the Middle East crisis. The Romanian News Agency Agerpres said. Such action should be based on Israeli withdrawal from all territories occupied after the 1967 war, recognition of the Palestinians' right to self-determination, and foundation of an independent Palestinian state, the two leaders said in a joint statement after talks. Romania is the only Soviet bloc country to maintain diplomatic relations with Israel. Agerpres later reported that Mr. Arafat had left Bucharest by air but did not give his destination.

EDMONTON (R) — British Petroleum (BP) has agreed to sell its refining and refining business in Canada to the Canadian government's Petro-Canada, a BP spokesman said in London Saturday. The purchase price for the BP Canada Inc. Shares being sold is about 347.5 million Canadian dollars ($290 million) 6.10 Canadian dollars ($13.4) share. The exact price would depend on the number of shares standing on the date of the offer, he said. The sale would release about 180 million Canadian dollars ($150 million) distribution to shareholders. BP Canada would no longer be required to provide working capital for the marketing and selling of oil or maintain oil inventories, added.

CAIRO (R) — The United States wants a quick settlement of the Egyptian-Israeli border dispute which is being held by the building of a $10-million-dollar hotel in the coastal strip of Taba, Egypt, a Foreign Ministry official said Saturday. Last week Mr. Ali al-Husseini, Egyptian Foreign Minister, said he had received a message from Mr. Shultz, U.S. Secretary of State, in which he accused Israel of violating an agreement on the 700-metre coastal strip.

'NCC doing well but no substitute for parliament'

Arar says Jordan is ready for democracy

AMMAN (J.T.) — Jordan and Jordanians are ready for a return to parliamentary life and democracy, and there are encouraging signs that this might not be far away, National Consultative Council (NCC) Speaker Suleiman Arar said. In an exclusive interview with the Jordan Times, Mr. Arar said the NCC has been a successful experience, but that it is in no way regarded as a substitute for an elected parliament. He pointed out that NCC members "have been discussing issues put before them with much more freedom, and in much greater detail than in earlier Jordanian parliaments."

SADR to stay voluntarily away from OAU summit

NAIROBI (R) — The decision by the Polisario front's Saharan Arab Democratic Republic (SADR) to suspend its participation in the 12th Organisation of African Unity (OAU) Summit is probably the key that will permit the summit to take place, diplomatic sources said Saturday.

In August, the summit was derailed for lack of a quorum when 20 countries led by Morocco boycotted the meeting in protest at SADR's presence.

Poland: Western support for Solidarity will prolong martial law

WARSAW (R) — The Polish government warned western countries Saturday that any support they offered to Solidarity underground forces planning strikes and disturbances in the next two months would only prolong martial law.

Since the SADR was created by a unilateral proclamation, L'Opinion said, how could the Polisario "dare continue to invoke the right to self-determination and take upon itself the right to speak in the name of the Saharan populations?"

Polish Foreign Minister Jacek Kuron said that the Polish government's message to be transmitted to the governments and people of the West.

Lebanese military team to negotiate Israel's pullout

BEIRUT (R) — Lebanon plans to negotiate Israel's withdrawal from the country through an existing military liaison team rather than a new joint committee, U.S. Middle East envoy Morris Draper said Saturday.

Prospects are brighter for a return to parliamentary life

By Samira Kassar

Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — Encouraging indications, hope and optimism of a return to parliamentary life sometime in the future seem stronger and brighter than they have ever been since parliament was suspended shortly after the 1967 Israeli occupation of the West Bank.

Cautious optimism of the possibility of a return soon to parliamentary life in Jordan was voiced by National Consultative Council (NCC) Speaker Suleiman Arar this week. He told the Jordan Times that there were "encouraging indications that there might be a return to parliamentary life because circumstances have changed in view of the international efforts regarding the Middle East situation and the rapprochement between Jordan and the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO)." He said he was "very optimistic" that these indications could create a circumstance conducive to the reinstatement of parliament, but pointed out that the present NCC might not be the last because its term will extend for another year and a half, whereas the existing Middle East peace initiatives project longer periods of time for the achievement of their desired outcomes.

Explaining the circumstances which lead to the suspension of Jordanian parliament in 1974 and the formation four years later of the NCC, Mr. Arar emphasised that neither His Majesty King Hussein nor the Jordanian government nor NCC members themselves regard the NCC as "a substitute for parliament." Ever since the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan was established, parliament existed in accordance with the constitution and parliamentary elections took place regularly.

When the West Bank fell under Israeli occupation, it became impossible to hold parliamentary elections that would also include the West Bank. For fear of creating a "constitutional vacuum" in the West Bank that would be exploited by Israel to impose its own laws on the West Bank instead of Jordanian laws, the government extended the last parliament's term of office several times.

Difficult years

"But with passage of time, it was no longer feasible for the Jordanian government to continue to extend parliament's term of office indefinitely, even with the help of slight constitutional amendments to fill vacancies caused by the death of some members or the absence of West Bank members," Mr. Arar said.

"On the other hand, it would not have been possible to hold parliamentary elections in the East Bank alone because the constitution requires that such elections should take place in the West Bank governorates of Hebron, Nablus and Jerusalem as well as in the East Bank governorates of Amman, Salt, Irbid, Karak and Ma'an. Holding elections in these five East Bank governorates to the exclusion of the West Bank would have entailed a constitutional amendment which would have been only too eagerly seized upon by the Israelis as an opportunity to claim that Jordan was disavowing its constitutional and legal responsibility for the West Bank and that this vacuum necessitated the implementation of Israeli law in the occupied territories. This would have caused grave damage to the Arab cause," Mr. Arar added. He said that the only way out of the dilemma for the Jordanian government was to dissolve parliament, namely the House of Representatives. The Senate (Upper House of Parliament), whose members are appointed, was not dissolved as an indication of the government's desire to underscore its commitment to the constitution. But the Senate only has constitutional powers in conjunction with the House of Representatives, and hence has been incapacitated. Since it is a purely constitutional body, it would have been impossible for the government to widen its purview and add to its authority to fill the gap caused by the suspension of parliament without a major constitutional amendment.

"So the country remained for several years without a parliament and without any other effective body that would share the government's task of issuing temporary laws," the NCC speaker said. "As this situation persisted, the government began to feel the need for a body that would share the responsibility of discussing and participating in the formulation of such temporary laws, so a temporary law calling for the formation of a consultative body to share such a responsibility was issued in 1978." Since then, two NCCs comprising 60 appointed members considered to represent all sectors of society have completed their terms, and a third, the current 75-member NCC is in its sixth month.

Extension of previous NCCs

Mr. Arar, who served as a member during the NCC's two previous cycles, feels that the present cycle is an extension of its predecessors. The NCC, he feels, has been a successful experience, mainly due to government support. He pointed out that the cabinet has attended all NCC sessions and that NCC discussions have dealt with both political and legal issues.

But he is quick to reiterate that the NCC is in no way to be regarded as a substitute for parliament. Besides the fact that its members are appointed not elected, there are three areas of authority enjoyed by parliament which the NCC in its capacity as a mere consultative body cannot practise, Mr. Arar explained. Parliament, as a constitutional body, is empowered to bring down the government if it takes a vote of no-confidence. Its decisions are binding on the government, whereas NCC decisions are not. Mr. Arar pointed out, however, that no NCC decision was ever ignored by any of the four governments which have been in office since the NCC's formation. Parliament is the only body entitled to issue permanent laws. Since its suspension, the government has been issuing temporary laws, and since its establishment in 1978, the NCC has been consulted on every temporary law that has been adopted.

NCC members are nominated for appointment by the government and the King issues a decree formally appointing them. They are chosen to represent all sectors of the population in Jordan and include presidents of some professional associations, businessmen, intellectuals and tribal representatives. Besides sectoral representation, competence and professional expertise are other criteria for appointment since members are expected to offer advice and opinions when the NCC is consulted on financial, legal, educational, political and other aspects.

No special arrangements for choosing members to represent citizens of Palestinian origin holding Jordanian passports and residing in the West Bank are made because all holders of Jordanian nationality, whether originally from the East Bank or the West Bank, are considered Jordanian citizens on an equal footing with one another. But Mr. Arar pointed out that there are certain areas like Amman and Zarqa where large numbers of citizens of Palestinian origin are concentrated and that about one-third of NCC members belonging to these areas. But he stressed that this ratio is completely incidental, and in no way stems from a deliberate government policy.

Effective representatives

Mr. Arar does not feel that NCC members are less effective in bringing the problems of those they represent to the attention of the NCC for public discussion or that they are less committed to the interests of those they represent simply because they are appointed rather than elected. Members, he feels, are as accessible to the public at large as elected representatives are. The public can contact NCC members through petitions, visits and any other social means over any issue that needs to be tackled by the NCC. Members can then bring these matters before the NCC either by demanding a debate, or a government explanation, or through making a suggestion. These three options are open to members and are carried out according to a procedure specified by the NCC's by-laws.

Mr. Arar feels that appointment of NCC members may be more of an advantage than election on two counts: "first, members are not restricted by considerations relating to the often narrow interests of constituencies, and are hence freer to adopt a broader perspective when debating legal and political issues. "Secondly, appointment ensures that competent members are chosen, whereas elections may not always result in the best representatives being chosen, one of the reasons being that professionals, academicians and intellectuals might not desire to get elected, whereas they would welcome being appointed by the government as a more dignified method."

Mr. Arar pointed out that NCC members have been discussing issues put before them with much more freedom and in much greater detail than in earlier Jordanian parliaments. Several weeks ago during a debate on the functions of the NCC General Mobilisation Committee (previously the Follow-Up Committee, formed while the Israeli invasion of Lebanon was in progress), the NCC's political role was discussed and emphasised. Mr. Arar expressed the opinion that the recent discussion and emphasis of the NCC's role in discussing political issues did not mean that the NCC was assuming an added role it had not played before. Political issues were always discussed at the NCC very seriously, he said. The Syrian military build-up on the northern border in 1980 was discussed at the NCC as was the Iraqi-Iranian war, he said. Last week, the prime minister held a closed meeting lasting several hours with the NCC's Foreign Affairs Committee and briefed its members on the results of the Jordanian-Palestinian talks headed by the King and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, Mr. Arar said.

However, it is not up to the NCC as a whole to initiate large public meetings and rallies outside the NCC to discuss political issues such as the proposed Jordanian-Palestinian federation, he said. "Such activities would fall outside the legal purview of the NCC. But NCC members on an individual level can meet with the public as they please to discuss whatever issues they please."

No permanent groupings

Although it has become something of a custom for some NCC members to speak on behalf of several other members as well as on their own behalfs and to coordinate their votes on legal issues being debated, Mr. Arar does not feel that this phenomenon indicates that actual political groupings do exist within the NCC. He says members lobby concerning certain issues and often form groups to deal with these specific issues. But he says these groupings are not of a permanent and continuous nature, often changing according to the issue in hand.

There have been reports during the past year that some NCC

NCC President Suleiman Arar: "There are encouraging indications that there might be a return to parliamentary life because circumstance have changed in view of the international efforts regarding the Middle East situation and the rapprochement between Jordan and the PLO."

members are contemplating the formation of one, possibly two political parties, the theory being that the NCC is the natural and healthy environment for the crystallisation of political tendencies into one or more courses and around one or more nuclei. But Mr. Arar does not view the creation of political parties as one of the NCC's functions. "The NCC is a forum for free expression of members' opinions—opinions which are put forth for debate and as such are open for various degrees of support from other members," he pointed out. "But the creation of political parties has nothing to do with the NCC," he said. Moreover, he is of the opinion that political parties anywhere in the world are not created for the purpose of parliamentary representation alone.

Facilities for members

NCC members do not have individual or even shared offices for their personal use in the NCC building, nor do they have secretaries to type out their speeches, make their appointments and look up information for them.

But Mr. Arar does not feel that there is a need for any such facilities or that NCC members complain of their lack. He points out that members are professionals who hold other jobs as well, many of them with private office facilities of their own. "Moreover, the NCC's general secretariat is always ready to provide them with any additional information that they may need to study laws under discussion or investigate issues being debated."

Agendas of each session are made available to members ahead of time to enable them to dig up relevant information and investigate the issues to be discussed, he said. The NCC has its own library, four offices that can be used for meetings between members, four conference rooms for the different NCC committees to hold meetings and a large conference hall, he added.

Mr. Arar expressed general satisfaction at the way in which press coverage is accorded to NCC sessions and he pointed out that any statement made at the NCC was publishable without restriction with the rare exception of government information disclosed by the prime minister with the express prohibition that it not be carried by the press.

Experienced politician

Mr. Arar, who is married with two daughters and a son, is an experienced politician. He began his political career at the Foreign Ministry in 1966, then became a prominent member of the Jordanian National Union which was Jordan's only political party in the early seventies. Later he became editor-in-chief of the Arabic Jordanian Newspaper Al Rai' and president of the Journalists' Professional Association. He was twice minister of interior, as well as minister of agriculture and minister of state for Prime Ministry affairs. Last April, he was appointed as speaker of the present NCC.

PLO-Jordanian talks

Referring to the recent visit by PLO delegation headed by PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and the Jordanian-Palestinian talks that had taken place during the visit, he said that he was "extremely optimistic" regarding the results of these talks. Both sides were well aware of the situation in the region, and his conversations with PLO Executive Committee members as well as reports of PLO statements abroad regarding the talks all gave reason for great optimism, he said.

On recent American calls that "moderate" Arab states "come out of the closet" and openly recognise Israel, Mr. Arar said "it is just and honourable peace of which Jordan is seeking not of recognitions which are no more than slogans." Once just peace was achieved, the rest would come of its own accord, he said.

He expressed the opinion that Israel and "its allies in the West" are using the claim that the Arabs will not recognise them for propaganda purposes. He described the U.S. calls for recognition as "naive." He said that the Fez Arab Summit conference resolutions included Jordan's (and the Arabs') willingness to coexist with all the states in the area, a definition which includes Israel. Moreover, he expressed the opinion that Jordan's acceptance to study and discuss the Reagan peace proposals with other Arab states indicated a stand that was far from intransigent. "But politics does not contain issues that are either black or white," he said.

"Israel as it now exists has a history of persecution against the Palestinians and of aggression against the entire Arab Nation. It is occupying the land of an entire people. If it decides to sit down around the negotiating table within the context of existing international and Arab peace proposals arriving at a solution will naturally be discussed," he said.

"But they want to take everything beforehand," he said, "and then they will decide whether or not they will honour the Arabs by conceding to negotiate with them and whether or not they will recognise the PLO." He added that such demands for unconditional recognition were "unreasonably impossible" and were being made because "Israel had no real intention from withdrawing from the occupied territories." Recognition in itself was not the issue, he said, but withdrawal was the issue. "How do they want us to recognise them? Within what borders?" he asked.

Lectures on Israeli 'innocence'

IT IS NOT because Jordan and Jordanians are not ready for democracy that the country does not have an elected parliament, National Consultative Council Speaker Suleiman Arar says in an interview in today's Jordan Times. "But it is because of the Israeli occupation of the West Bank that we cannot hold elections and run our own affairs like we always did."

In the wide-range interview, Mr. Arar goes on to explain why Jordan has to take into account anything and everything that might prejudice the rights of the Palestinian people under occupation when making even the slightest of amendments to the Jordanian constitution.

So the story goes. Even when it is under hostile foreign occupation, the West Bank is still so close to Jordan, their future tied together and will be more so when the occupation is ended and Palestinians regain the right and the power to run their own affairs and determine their own future.

Jordan meanwhile remains true to its commitment that Palestinians and Jordanians are people who have one destiny and common aspirations. The country is in no mood to bargain over Palestinian rights to self-determination and national sovereignty, even if that meant difficulties and hardship for Jordan, which is in effect what the NCC president is telling us.

It is not therefore the question of whether Jordan, the West Bank and Gaza will have a federation that is blocking the path of peace in the area. Nor is it true that Jordanians and Palestinians are consequently Arabs do not yearn for peace if only for their own good and progress.

The whole world, especially those who are asking the Arabs to extend immediate and unconditional recognition to Israel, should understand these facts before lecturing us on Israeli innocence.

'Threats will not work with us,' Israelis tell U.S. administration

The following article first appeared in the Jerusalem Post. The author is a member of the Post's editorial staff.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S peace initiative. Israel's refusal to bend its policies and the programme in west Beirut have given rise to renewed talk of U.S. pressure on Israel to bring it back to the path of "realistic" foreign policies.

Most of the observers who raise this possibility base themselves on a very common image of Israel, that of a military power and an economic cripple. Indeed, this nebechlike Shimon image of a feeble Samson, to quote Levi Eshkol, has more than one politician in the world thinking that only pressure from the U.S. could bring Israel back to its senses.

What kind of pressures could the Reagan administration use should it decide to twist Israel's arm? If we limit ourselves to possible economic pressures, it would appear that in the short term, i.e. some months during which the Reagan initiative and the Arab resolutions of the Fez summit could be pushed forward, potential American leverage is rather limited.

It could be argued that Israel's large external debt is the one point of vulnerability to external pressures. This debt amounted, at the end of last March, to some $18.4 billion, one of the world's largest debts on a per capita basis.

Israel's vulnerability, however, is not indicated by the absolute size of its foreign obligations, but rather by the structure of this debt. What part is due to be paid this year? What part of the foreign debt is long-term, and what part short-term? To whom are we in debt and how large are the obligations of the public sector? These are the relevant questions.

A recent payments crisis has caused countries such as Mexico, Poland, Bolivia and others to "go bankrupt." It was caused mainly by the size of their short-term debt, representing some 50 per cent of their total liabilities. Most of these countries' creditors are international commercial banks, and their capabilities of repaying their debts were severely harmed by the drop in prices of the agricultural and mineral goods they export.

A look at statistics will show how far Israel is from this position. Only 13 per cent of its debt, some $2.4 billion in short-term. Three quarters of Israel's foreign obligations are long-term, and their repayment will be spread over a considerable number of years. The remaining liabilities, some 13 per cent, are middle-term credits.

Limited leverage

Thus the leverage of the Reagan administration is rather limited. Of the total $2.4 billion short-term obligations, only $27 million, about 1 per cent of the total, are owed by Israel's public sector, i.e. by the government.

The bulk of the short-term debt consists of suppliers' credits to Israeli importers, including oil imports. This means that the size of this debt is directly linked to the amount of the country's imports, and private foreign exporters, eager to expand sales, and not likely to respond to U.S. efforts to control their transactions with Israel.

As for Israel's obligations to international commercial banks, the statistics show a rather surprising fact. If we consider the assets that the public and private sectors hold in these banks, some $9 billion and we match them with the corresponding liabilities figure, some $6 billion then Israel is left in a creditor position in relation to those foreign banks.

To convey the significance of these figures, one could say that the ratio of Israel's assets to its liabilities, vis-a-vis foreign commercial banks, is close to that of Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

During the years of the state's existence, Israel's governments have used grants and long-term credits from the U.S. and world Jewry to finance the import of arms and other goods. This is one of the reasons why on a short-term basis the country's debt is relatively minor and it can claim a net creditor position in relation to foreign commercial banks.

At the end of March 1982, the Israeli government owed $8.7 billion to foreign governments and international public institutions: $3 billion to world Jewry and only $229 million some 1.7 per cent of its total obligations, to foreign commercial banks, most of this debt being middle- and long-term.

On the other hand, Israel's public sector has, over the past five years, increased the amount of foreign currency reserves in its hands. These reserves are mostly invested in foreign assets and in foreign banks.

Net creditors

In 1977, the foreign currency reserves held by the Bank of Israel reached $1.6 billion. By the end of 1981, these reserves totalled some $3.5 billion. What happened was that over the years Israel used some grants and long-term credits not only to pay for imports, but also to accumulate reserves and to invest them in foreign assets at a rate of interest higher than the one it had to pay to long-term creditors.

Israeli commercial banks, for their part, hold some $5 billion in foreign banks and have liabilities owed to these banks of about $4 billion so they, too, are net creditors vis-a-vis the international commercial banking system.

It is more than likely that the U.S. would find it most difficult to convince an over-sensitive international banking system to begin a punishment campaign against Israeli commercial banks. The latter are in a sound financial position, while the former is going through one of its most serious crises in years.

Nor could the amount of dollars Israel must repay for debt servicing in future months be a means for American leverage. During 1982, Israel will have to pay back some $9 billion to foreign creditors, but this figure must be broken down into its elements in order to give proper weight to its importance.

Of the $4.9 billion figure, some $3.9 billion represents repayment of principal but this figure includes $2.4 billion of short-term obligations. This, as already noted, cannot be a source of worry for our decision-makers.

True, Israel this year will have to pay $1 billion in interest on its liabilities, but it has to be remembered that Israel will also be earning interest from foreign currency assets it holds.

Some history could be useful at this point. During 1981, the rates of interest for U.S. dollar assets went up sharply as a result of American monetary policies. Israel was able to take advantage of these rising rates since most of its assets were placed on a short-term basis.

Israel's debt, on the other hand, is based on the long-term credits it has received over the years. When these credits were granted, the prevailing rates of interest were lower than those of today, and in some cases even lower than the present rate of inflation in the U.S.

Israel's rising interest earnings on foreign assets are reflected in the statistics published by the Bank of Israel on net payments for capital services.

These include sums paid to foreigners as interest and the transfer overseas of profits made here by foreign enterprises. As a result of the higher interest rates which Israel-owned assets were earning relative to the interest paid on the country's debt, the net figure for capital services payments in 1981 was $100 million smaller than that of 1980.

Of the $4.9 billion, which Israel will have to pay during the present year, only $1.4 billion was the result of middle-term credits, which the country received some years ago.

This is a sum, which as noted, Israel can handle. Even in the worst case, Israel would have almost no difficulties in renegotiating this debt, since only $300 million of the $1.4 billion accounts for payments to be made to foreign governments and international institutions, and $1 billion is due to credits received through the Israeli banking system, directly or through its intermediation, and from the Jewish people.

Block U.S. aid

Another theoretical threat to Israel, one that frequently appears in hypothetical scenarios of American-Israeli confrontation, is that the administration might in some way block the U.S. government aid annually given to Israel. To evaluate this threat, one must consider certain facts and figures.

Recent developments suggest that in 1982 Israel's imports of arms and equipment will amount to about $2.2 billion, a sum roughly equal to the amount of U.S. aid it receives in grants and long-term credits. Israel also imports goods and materials for local military production and activities totalling some $700 million.

These two figures together, are more or less similar to the amount of aid Israel is requesting from the U.S. for 1983.

The most likely way U.S. aid could be used as an instrument of pressure would be for the American administration to prevent an aid increase, rather than cutting the present amount, a move that is being bandied about in the U.S. Congress and in the media. This is so since the annual aid figure is determined by long-run to break. And such a step would mean an almost head-on clash with Israel, which goes against the interests of any American administration.

So let us assume that on the pretext of a general need to limit the federal budget, the U.S. government decides to keep aid to Israel at its present level.

This does not mean that Israel will remain defenceless. One step the Israeli decision-makers could take would be a reduction in military imports.

In fact, there are senior economic officials in Jerusalem who would welcome this and have for years insisted on the need to reduce the rate of increase in military spending. Defence Minister Ariel Sharon himself has said more than once that he prefers a smaller, more efficient army and that Israel cannot afford to be trapped in a quantitative arms race with the Arab states.

Thus the possibility of using U.S. aid as a means of leverage in the short-term is also limited, since Israel could adapt itself to this situation.

On the other hand, a reduction in Israel's orders for military goods from U.S. plants, could mean higher unemployment in certain sectors of the U.S. economy.

Those Israelis who want the Begin government to change its course must not look to short-term economic pressure from the U.S., but to their own efforts to convince the public of the dangers they see for Israel and the Middle East.

This analysis, it should be stressed, is limited to the short-term and does not deal with the potential effectiveness of political pressure on Israel.

In the long run, the picture is, of course, completely different. Israel's exports are becoming less and less capable of paying for the country's imports, and in due time, the resulting debt will become unbearable if no long-term aid and credits are forthcoming. The U.S. could use economic means to try to bend Israel only by a continuous and long effort.

In any confrontation between Reagan and Begin, it would be logical to expect the U.S. to use political means unless the American administration is convinced that the confrontation will be a long one and economic pressures have a chance of success.

Britons tighten braces for nuclear arms debate

By Stephen Powell
 Reuters

LONDON — A debate on whether Britain should abandon nuclear weapons is warming up 30 years after the country exploded its first atomic bomb.

The debate broadened last week to involve the established church, the Church of England, as well as politicians and the peace movement.

Political sources say it is causing concern to the Conservative Government of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who is deeply committed to maintaining a British nuclear deterrent.

Last month the opposition Labour Party voted overwhelmingly for unilateral disarmament, delighting the peace movement.

Then on Oct. 18 the Church of England provoked instant controversy by publishing a report which advocated complete nuclear disarmament by Britain.

One Conservative said in Parliament that the bishops and clergy must be overpaid and underworked if they had time to produce such a report.

Government officials argued that unilateral disarmament would make multilateral nuclear disarmament more difficult.

Mrs. Thatcher, asked in Parliament on Oct. 19 to comment on the report, said that nuclear weapons were an essential part of Britain's security.

She said: "If there were any suggestion of unilateral disarmament it would threaten the peace and security that we have enjoyed for 37 years."

The church report cited two reasons for abandoning Britain's independent nuclear deterrent:

— first, in the hope of putting new life into the non-proliferation treaty, by showing that at least one of the nuclear powers is prepared to take its obligations under this instrument seriously.

— second, to eliminate what we feel to be a destabilising element in the world situation, Britain's ambiguously separate centre of decision-making on the use of nuclear weapons.

Cancel the Trident

It said Britain should immediately cancel the 7.5 billion sterling ($13.5 billion) order for the U.S. Trident submarine missile system, which would form part of the NATO umbrella for Western Europe although Britain would have ultimate control over it.

The report said Britain should phase out the existing Polaris missiles and submarines and negotiate with its allies the removal of all other nuclear weapons, including the U.S. cruise missiles due to be based here from 1983.

The Right Reverend John Baker, Bishop of Salisbury and chairman of the group which wrote the report, said he used to believe in the government's policy of deterrence.

He changed his mind during the two years he and five colleagues researched nuclear weapons and considered the ethical implications of their use.

"We do not consider that any cause can justify the use of weapons of this kind, because by using them we destroy the very values we claim to defend," he said.

ponents of this kind, because by using them we destroy the very values we claim to defend," he said.

The report recommended that Britain remain within NATO and play a full role in its defence with conventional weapons.

The church, like the country at large, appears deeply divided on the issue of nuclear armaments. One recent poll concluded that 40 per cent of Church of England clergy believed Britain should abandon nuclear weapons, 49 per cent disagreed and 11 per cent were undecided.

The churches in Britain were slow to debate the issue fully. Bruce Kent, a Catholic priest who leads Britain's Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (CND), said: "The churches have been painfully slow. But we are now seeing a great shift forward."

Churchmen are now more prone to question the degree of official secrecy surrounding nuclear weapons. Bishop Baker, in a letter to the London Times last week, called for more public information about British policy on the use of nuclear weapons.

First nuclear explosion

Intense secrecy has always surrounded Britain's nuclear policy. The original decision to develop nuclear weapons, taken during the 1945-1951 Labour Government was never debated by Parliament. It was not the Cabinet, but a select group of ministers, which gave the go-ahead.

On Oct. 23, 1952, Conservative Prime Minister Winston Churchill announced Britain's first nuclear explosion, in the Monte Bello islands off the coast of West Australia.

A disarmament campaign in the 1950s and 1960s petered out, but CND has undergone a renaissance in the last two years. The number of members registered with the London head office has increased from 3,000 in 1980 to over 40,000 today, with about 200,000 other active in local groups.

Peace campaigners say the resurrected CND, with more technical data at its fingertips, is much more efficient than the CND of the 1960s.

It has been campaigning strongly to persuade local authorities to declare their area "nuclear-free." CND says the over 140 authorities, with a population of 38 million, are now "nuclear-free."

Through its forceful campaigning at local level, CND has played a role in turning nuclear weapons into a national issue. Although the poor state of the economy and record unemployment are likely to be the main issues in the next election, opposition to nuclear weapons could be a vote-winner.

The religious affairs correspondent of the Times said last week: "Labour's claim that anti-nuclear defence policy is potentially an election winner is not necessarily mistaken."

Liverpool joins United on top of English League

LONDON (R) — Liverpool, the slumbering giants of English soccer, finally came out of their autumn hibernation Saturday... and promptly trampled all over luckless Brighton.

The reigning champions, without a League win in their last four games, were still rubbing the sleep from their eyes when Gerry Ryan shot Brighton ahead in the 10th minute.

Brighton lived to regret their audacity. Liverpool awoke with a roar, flexed their muscles and strode to the top of the first division with a crucial 3-1 victory.

Manchester United, who started the day as League leaders, fell from grace when they went down

3-1 at West Ham and suffered further indignity when defender Ashley Grimes was ordered off in the 54th minute for dissent.

United, level on the 22-point mark with Liverpool and West Ham, slipped to third on goal difference.

West Bromwich dropped two places to fourth, one point behind the leaders, after a crushing 6-1 setback at Ipswich, who were two goals up inside 10 minutes through transfer-seeking Eric Gates and Dutchman Frans Thijssen.

Scottish international John Wark then completed a one-man demolition job with four goals to take the tally to six.

Liverpool's impressive display owed much to Kenny Dalglish's return to form.

After Mark Lawrenson equalised in the 19th minute the former Scotland captain suddenly rediscovered his goal touch. In the 37th minute he found the back of the net for the first time this season and, like a lion tasting blood after a prolonged vegetarian diet, notched a superb second six minutes later.

Liverpool will be hoping Dalglish repeats the magic when they try to overturn a 1-0 deficit against Finnish guests JK Helsinki in Tuesday's European Cup second round second-leg tie.

Manchester United, without injured England skipper Ray Wilkins in midfield, were always struggling after striker Paul Goddard shot West Ham ahead in the 32nd minute.

Scottish fullback Ray Stewart added a second from the penalty spot, 60 seconds before Grimes' dismissal, and Geoff Pike inflicted further punishment on the hapless United defence in the 69th minute. Kevin Moran scored United's consolation with the 1st kick of the game.

Alan Ball, one of England's 1966 World Cup heroes, played his 736th and last League match for Southampton against former club Everton. Southampton gave ball a resounding send off with a 3-2 win—but the 37-year-old midfielder missed a penalty.

Ball, who will continue his career in Hong Kong, made his League debut for Blackpool in 1962 and became the first six-figure transfer man when he joined Everton for £110,000 in 1966.

He then had spells with Arsenal and Blackpool before moving on to Southampton.

Another former England favourite, Kevin Keegan, was struck by a missile during Newcastle's

3-1 defeat at Leeds in the second division.

Referee John Anderson took both teams off the pitch for five minutes as fireworks and other missiles cascaded onto the field from the terraces.

Fulham, held to a 1-1 draw by London neighbours Crystal Palace, relinquished top spot to Sheffield Wednesday, managed by Ball's World Cup team-mate Jackie Charlton, who won 2-0 at Leicester.

Opening lead: ?

Although West was looking at four to five defensive tricks in his own hand, he did not rate his defensive prospects too highly. Since the idea of releasing one of his minor-suit aces on opening lead was unappealing, he decided that his best chance was to attack with his long suit. And if he was going to lead a heart, why not the king? That might even force an entry to his partner's hand should East hold the queen.

When the king of hearts won the first trick, it was obvious who held the ace. The rest of the defense was automatic. West shifted immediately to ace of clubs and another. Declarer won in his hand and tried a sneaky eight of trumps, but Zia wasn't having any of that. He flew up with the ace of trumps, led a heart to his partner's ace and got a club ruff in return. Then he exited with a heart, ruffed by East and overruled by South.

Declarer suddenly found himself trapped in his hand with no entry to dummy. All he could do was draw trumps and lead the king of diamonds in the hope of smothering a bare queen. But since West had both diamond honors, he was able to win the king of diamonds with the ace, force out declarer's last trump with a heart and take the last two tricks with the queen of diamonds and a long heart for a most satisfying three-trick set.

Egypt begins ambitious plan

CAIRO (R) — Egypt has embarked on an ambitious five-year plan to increase its oil and natural gas production by about 85 per cent, Minister Ezzeddin Hilal said Saturday.

Mr. Hilal, in a statement to the semi-official daily Al-Ahram, said that 1.3 billion pounds ($1.6 billion) have been earmarked for the 32-87 plan.

The minister said the target is to increase the annual crude oil and natural gas production to 63 million tonnes from the present level of 6 million tonnes a year.

Egypt produces some 700,000 barrels of oil per day (b/d), a third of which is exported, and Mr. Hilal said the figure is expected to reach one million b/d in a few years' time.

Egypt's natural gas production reached about 6.5 million cubic metres last year and it hopes to double the yield shortly.

Earlier this week, Egypt slightly increased November prices of its oil.

The rises affected lower grade Gharib oil which is to be sold at $6.75 a barrel instead of $26.50 and Balayim grade at $29 a barrel instead of $28.60.

The price of Suez blend, Egypt's benchmark, remained unchanged at $32.60 a barrel.

Morocco gains cheap credit

WASHINGTON (R) — Morocco will be the first nation to buy American wheat on cheap credit under a new programme to bolster its farm exports, the Agriculture Department said Friday.

It said Morocco, which needs to import large amounts of grain or suffering from severe drought, will receive $28 million in interest-free U.S. government loans and $112 million in government-guaranteed loans to buy 1.1 million tonnes of wheat.

The export credit programme was among the measures to help struggling farmers announced by President Reagan last week during a midwestern campaign ahead of next Tuesday's congressional elections.

Agriculture Secretary John Block said export credits for other countries are expected to be announced next week. $500 million are spent on the programme in the current financial year.

U.S. Agriculture Department officials are visiting India, China, South Korea, Thailand, Pakistan and Yugoslavia to discuss the new credit scheme.

Arab National Bank expands

ADH (OPECNA) — The Arab National Bank has embarked on a comprehensive expansion programme which will include the installation of computers and increasing its network of branches to more than 60 by the end of the year.

The Riyadh-based bank, said to be the most profitable Saudi bank, has 48 branches, with another 15 due to be opened. The network is to be automated within the next two years with a digital computer system.

Last year, the bank increased its assets by 30 per cent to $1.2 billion from $0.9 billion in 1980. Net earnings rose by 46 per cent to $2.2 million.

U.S. hopes economic forecast will spur ties with W. Europe

BRUSSELS (R) — Washington hopes the economic upturn forecast for the United States next year will spur a turnaround in troubled relations with its European allies, a U.S. administration official said Friday.

But in a background briefing for reporters the official said that if high level talks next month under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) failed there could be fresh transatlantic disputes.

He declined to forecast a speedy end to the row over the Soviet gas pipeline, although he said progress had been made towards resolving the conflict.

The official said the Atlantic alliance's underlying strength had weathered recent trade disputes over steel, agriculture and the pipeline.

The forecast economic recovery in the U.S., prompting an upturn in world trade, would help remove many of the short-term trade problems which have recently bedevilled the alliance.

As countries pulled out of the "synchronised recession" of the past few years, many present differences would be settled, he said.

The official added that many Europeans had misunderstood the basic aim of U.S. trade sanctions against Moscow, which was not to engage in economic war against the Soviet Union, but to level off trade temporarily.

The strategic, or military, stability which had allowed East-West ties to expand rapidly in the 1970s had changed radically by 1980 after the Soviet military build-up.

Confidence in strategic parity

W. Germans protest rising unemployment

HANOVER, West Germany (R) — About 30,000 West German workers took to the streets of Hanover Saturday to protest against rising unemployment.

The West German trade union federation (DGB) plans a series of protests against the economic policies of the new centre-right government. Last Saturday, 200,000 demonstrators turned out in Dortmund, Frankfurt and Nuremberg.

Sharp criticism of the policies of conservative Chancellor Helmut Kohl came from DGB officials here. Executive member Mr. Lothar Zimmermann told trade unionists that the government was taking from the poor but only borrowing from the rich.

The government's economic programme includes a delay in state pension increases, a rise in value added tax and a compulsory loan to the government from the higher-paid.

Mr. Georg Drescher, head of the DGB in the state of Lower Saxony, said the government's budget cuts would reduce consumer demand and could endanger up to 200,000 jobs.

West German unemployment is running at 1.8 million and economists have forecast up to 2.5 million jobless this winter.

had to be restored before trade and other links could continue to grow, he said.

This U.S. re-evaluation of its relations with Moscow was at the core of its dispute with its allies over supplies of Western equipment for a Soviet pipeline to carry gas from Siberia to Western Europe.

The official said recent talks between European and U.S. officials had brought progress, but President Reagan would not end his embargo on U.S.-made or licensed equipment for the pipeline until Western Europe agreed a package of comparable sanctions.

The official said such a package, now under discussion, would aim mainly to tighten credit terms for Moscow and to restrict further the sale of "sensitive" Western equipment to the Communist Bloc.

American firms, which stand to lose around $1 billion in pipeline contracts, have also been applying intense pressure to end the embargo.

But the official would not speculate on whether a deal was possible before U.S. congressional elections early next month.

Turning to other trade disputes, the official said it was vital that ministerial talks in Geneva next month under the auspices of GATT succeeded in liberalising world trade.

Preparations for the talks have been marred by industrialised nations' apparent reluctance to halt a slide into protectionism.

If the talks failed, the official said, Washington might find it impossible to resist new import barriers. European nations would thus be denied the benefits of American economic recovery.

Meanwhile, President Reagan Friday welcomed the latest sign of U.S. economic recovery as "another patch of blue" on the horizon.

Mr. Reagan, in Utah on the final leg of a two-day campaign swing through five states, cited new government figures as proof that his economic policies were working to end the current recession and that Republicans should be elected on Tuesday.

Africa's economic prospects seen gloomy

JOHANNESBURG (R) — Ecologists and government officials are painting a gloomy picture of South Africa's economic prospects for 1983.

Despite a strong rally on world markets since mid year, South Africa's economy is expected to grow by more than half a per cent, some predict it may even tank for the first time since World War II.

The recession may have provided political implications as the loss of jobs will fall most heavily on the majority black population and so could spark off more social unrest. The gloom largely reflects the lack of any meaningful economic recovery worldwide, and particularly in the United States, which could bring significantly higher demand and prices for South Africa's exports.

And although the country's balance of payments deficit is narrowing, inflation remains stubbornly high, preventing any relaxation in the government's strict monetary policy.

Recently the government announced it was approaching the International Monetary Fund (IMF) for a $1.07 billion loan to cover the deficit.

Inflation last month ran at an annual rate of 13.85 per cent — way above the single figures achieved by most of South Africa's major trading partners — and is unlikely to fall sharply next year according to economists.

Most predictions see consumer prices rising some 13 per cent next year as cost increases announced this year continue to feed through into the economy.

Rapid inflation, along with high interest rates, lower wage rises, shorter working hours, higher unemployment and already high levels of indebtedness, are all expected to pare back consumer expenditure growth next year.

Falling demand for cars has already led to lay-offs as production is cut back. Sales in September fell to 22,125 units from 24,176 in August and 23,649 a year ago, and economists are predicting the market may shrink some 10 per cent next year.

They also forecast a downturn in demand for other consumer durables, where sales have so far been maintained by keen price-cutting and a willingness by consumers to dip into savings rather than cut back.

The slump in consumer spending is likely to be mirrored by a drop in other sectors of domestic demand, the economists said.

In the public sector, containment of current and capital expenditure is an important element in the government's economic strategy, while for private industry, falling orders will force postponement of expansion plans and high real interest rates will lead to a more careful watch over inventory levels.

The economists foresee investment falling some nine per cent in real terms next year, with gross domestic expenditure down between three and five per cent after a one per cent drop this year.

Most retrenchments will come in the unskilled and semi-skilled areas where nearly all the workers are black.

The economists fear that black workers' grievances may be channelled through the work place — where fledgling black unions have started to flex their muscles recently — because political participation continues to be denied to blacks.

They noted that South Africa needs to keep creating more jobs and expanding the economy just to cope with the growing black population.

In a speech two years ago, State President Marais Viljoen said that South Africa had to create 1,500 jobs a day for the next 20 years for blacks alone.

But the government has given clear notice that it has no intention of reflation of the economy and says South Africa's recovery will have to wait an upturn in the major Western economies.

The main indicator that appears to have turned the corner is the balance of payments deficit, which the economists said was the first target of the government's financial strategy.

The day before Finance Minister Owen Horwood announced he was approaching the IMF, official figures showed the deficit had fallen to an annualised $4.4 billion (R5.05 billion) in the second quarter from $6.89 billion ($6.43 billion) in the first.

The rise in the price of gold, which accounts for some 50 per cent of the country's foreign income, to some $425 an ounce from below $300 in June and a reduction in imports will have helped.

And economists now say the country may have an overall payments surplus next year.

Such a surplus, if combined with a more buoyant U.S. economy, offers the prospect of moderate economic growth in 1984, the economists said.

Reagan fights to ensure Senate majority

WASHINGTON (R) — President Reagan plans two more appeals to American voters over the weekend to preserve Republican control of the Senate in next Tuesday's congressional elections.

Mr. Reagan returned to the White House Friday night from a trip through five Western states which gave him solid support in 1980 and whose agricultural economies have been lightly affected by the recession, compared to the rest of the country.

In Utah he had one piece of cheering economic news to announce: A Commerce Department report that the index of leading economic indicators rose 0.5 per cent in September.

The president called the report "another patch of blue" on the economic horizon, saying: "Pretty soon even the diehard doom peddlers will have to admit it—America is on her way back, and we will lead the way out of this worldwide recession."

His speeches in Wyoming, Montana, Nevada, Utah and New Mexico urging support of Republican Senate candidates amounted to a familiar defence of his policy of cutting taxes and government spending to spur private investment and production.

But the president also inserted new sections in prepared speeches to accuse Democratic Party opponents of smearing him.

He said their charges that he was intent on destroying the social security system were "sheer demagoguery."

In his regular weekly five-minute radio broadcast Sunday, Mr. Reagan was expected again to sound his theme that the nation would soon enjoy economic recovery.

He also planned a final five-minute address to voters, to be shown on television.

"Vote your hopes, not your fears," was the president's message to Americans at one late campaign rally.

At stake in the elections are all 435 seats in the Democratic-dominated House of Representatives, 33 of 100 seats in the Republican-controlled Senate and 36 of 50 state governorships.

The Democratic majority in the House is 241 to 192, with two vacancies. The Republicans control the Senate by 54 to 45, with one independent.

Nuclear freeze issue

WASHINGTON (R) — In the final days of the campaign for Tuesday's U.S. elections, the Reagan administration has stepped up efforts to defeat resolutions supporting a freeze on building, testing and deploying new nuclear weapons.

Voters in the congressional and state elections will have an opportunity to vote on the resolutions in nine states and 30 cities and counties, according to Randy Keeler, national coordinator of the nuclear weapons freeze campaign.

Hundreds of city and town councils have already adopted such resolutions, which urge a nuclear freeze but impose no obligations on President Reagan.

A similar resolution was defeated in the House of Representatives by only two votes earlier this year.

Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger denounced the freeze as a dangerous idea in a news conference at the Pentagon this week.

A conservative pressure group, the American Security Council Foundation, has shown an anti-freeze film in 40 states. The film, called Countdown for America, contains an interview with Mr. Weinberger who says the Soviet Union wants a nuclear freeze because it would give Moscow permanent nuclear superiority.

U.S. tells El Salvador to better internal record

SAN SALVADOR (R) — Deplored the murder of some 30,000 people in El Salvador, U.S. Ambassador Deane Hinton said Saturday that American aid could be "cut off unless the government curbed human rights abuses and prosecuted the killers of U.S. citizens."

In an unusually sharply worded speech to the American chamber of commerce, Mr. Hinton said U.S. citizens had been among those murdered — a reference to the killing of two advisers to El Salvador's controversial land reform programme last year and four American churchwomen in 1980.

He said there was no effective system of criminal justice in El Salvador, adding that the government almost never brought to trial those who carried out and ordered killings.

"If you're convinced I am talking about a fundamental and critical problem, consider these facts," he told a packed meeting. "Since 1979, perhaps as many as 30,000 Salvadorans have been murdered — not killed in battle, murdered."

"Less than 1,500 cases of 'crimes against the person' — homicide, assault, battery and rape — had been prosecuted before your courts. Most striking of all, there have been less than 200 convictions for these crimes."

Mr. Hinton said he hoped the successful prosecution of cases involving the murder of U.S. citizens would make possible the prosecution of crimes involving Salvadorans.

Speaking in Spanish, the ambassador added: "As the representative of the United States to El Salvador I try to communicate as clearly and honestly as I can the sentiments of the American people, the congress, and the administration."

"The message is simple: 'El Salvador must make substantial progress in bringing the murderers of our citizens, including those who ordered the murders, to justice."

'Danish, West German navies could stop East bloc fleets'

GLUECKSBURG, West Germany (R) — The West German and Danish navies could still bottle up Warsaw Pact seaborne forces in the Baltic in time of war, West Germany's chief of naval operations said.

Vice-Adm. Guenter Fromm told a news conference the two navies could also handle Communist forces in the Baltic itself, despite intensified modernisation and cooperation among the Warsaw Pact fleets.

But he said West Germany's North Sea fleet would be hard put to carry out its NATO tasks as more Soviet ships appeared in the area, more modern and outnumbering the home forces.

Adm. Fromm said Britain's conflict with Argentina over the Falkland islands had brought nothing new to light from the viewpoint of armaments.

It had merely reinforced the West German navy's belief in the air defence needs of individual ships. It had prepared for this years ago although the new U.S. RAM air defence system would not be installed in a West German ship until 1984, in the last of six "Bremen" class frigates entering service.

U.S. court rules out Halloween execution

WASHINGTON (R) — The U.S. supreme court has refused to allow the Halloween execution of a Texas convicted of killing his eight-year-old son with a poisoned lollipop during "witches night" festivities in 1974.

Halloween, the abbreviated name for All Hallow's Eve, the Oct. 31 festival of ghosts, witches and demons, is popular with American children who dress up in costumes and go from house to house collecting sweets.

The prosecution at the trial of Ronald Clark O'Bryan alleged he gave his son cyanide-laced candy to collect $20,000 insurance on the boy's life.

O'Bryan said his son had been given the lollipop by a stranger.

The prosecution said he had also tried to kill his daughter to collect insurance and tried to kill three other children to divert suspicion from himself.

Houston district Judge Michael McSpadden had ordered O'Bryan to die on Halloween Sunday, saying he thought the timing was appropriate. But an appeals court overturned the execution order and the supreme court upheld the ruling Friday by eight to one.

O'Bryan would have been the first U.S. convict to die by lethal injection, the new mode of execution in Texas. Traditionally, murders have been despatched by hanging, the firing squad, the gas chamber or the electric chair.

Halloween festivities in recent years have been marred by unsuspecting children being given poisoned sweets or apples with razor blades or needles in them.

U.S. authorities have urged parents to be particularly careful about allowing their children to accept Halloween treats this year.

Australian trial ends

DARWIN, Australia (R) — Michael Chamberlain, who saw his pregnant wife jailed for life for murdering their infant daughter, walked from court a free man Saturday after being given a suspended sentence.

It was the final twist to a seven-week court drama in which the couple claimed that a dingo (wild dog) probably killed the child, whose body was never found.

Mrs. Lindy Chamberlain, 34, due to give birth in two weeks, went into a tiny and solitary cell in Darwin's Berrimah jail Friday to serve a life sentence with hard labour.

She was found guilty of murdering nine-week-old Azaria Chamberlain by cutting her throat in the family car during a camping holiday in Aug. 1980, at Ayers Rock in the Australian outback.

Saturday her 38-year-old husband, a Seventh Day Adventist pastor, was given a suspended sentence of 18 months hard labour and placed on a three-year good behaviour bond of 500 dollars ($540). He broke down in tears after judge James Muirhead sentenced him and then said: "You may be released forthwith."

Defence counsel had told the court that life for the Chamberlains' other two children, boys aged six and nine, would be intolerable if both parents were jailed.

What the press called Australia's murder case of the century began with a cry from Mrs. Chamberlain which startled campers at the Ayers Rock beauty spot — "My God, the dingo has got my baby."

An immediate search by most of the 300 people at the site failed to find any trace of a dingo or the infant, but a week later Azaria's clothing was found four kilometres away at the base of the rock.

At a televised inquest in February, 1981, Coroner Denis Barritt's finding was that Azaria had been attacked by a dingo and neither parent was responsible.

Northern territory Chief Minister Paul Everingham then ordered police to reopen the investigation to take in new forensic evidence and in November last year Mr. Barritt's findings were quashed.

Now the trial is over and the verdicts are in, but many key elements remain unexplained in the mystery which has gripped Australia's imagination for more than two years.

Azaria's body has never been traced, no one saw her disappear, and prosecutors admitted from the outset of the trial that they could provide no motive for murder.

Question: The Middle East has been desperately volatile all spring and summer and is likely to continue that way. You may not be able to comment too much, but can you tell us — give us some insight as to how you think — how you hope things are going to develop in resolving the serious problems that exist there?

Answer: There are plenty of problems in the Middle East, and we shouldn't forget that there is a war on between Iraq and Iran. When you say Middle East, you are probably thinking about the Arab-Israeli conflict in Lebanon and so on; but I remind you that there is that problem, and it has a lot of repercussions to it. But, swinging over from that and in the Middle East — I don't know whether you include Afghanistan and that set of problems and the implications for what surrounds the Gulf, but I just put those markers out there in case you think I've forgotten about them. But, as far as Lebanon is concerned I will comment on that first.

We had a very good visit with Amin Gemayel last week. And, of course, we have been working with the Lebanese and others to help get the foreign forces out of Lebanon and help the government take control — put together a reconciliation of the various confessional groups in Lebanon and start the process of rebuilding and reconstructing their culture and economy and life.

Among the things that Amin Gemayel is very conscious of and talked about a lot, was the importance of the basic peace process. And if you think about it for a second, it's easy to see why — because of all the countries in the Middle East that have been hit hard by the lack of a solution to the Palestinian problem and the conflict resulting from it, Lebanon has been the one that's been hurt the most. Almost an innocent bystander. But they have been clobbered by all of that. Going way back for almost ten years now.

So, he has and feels a great stake in the peace process and was quite forthcoming in the strength of his support for President Reagan's initiatives. Now, the interest in the peace process is very much alive. The visit that we had in Washington on Friday from King Hassan as a leader of an Arab League delegation that included a complete spectrum of views in the Arab World was evidence of that and I would say the overall result of that meeting was a constructive one, and it was evidence that on the Arab side they are very much interested in peace.

We're always being asked about our strategy and what sort of leverage are we going to be using as whatever help we can give in bringing about a peaceful situation. The president, though, puts up front that the big lever is peace. If you've lived in an area that has seen lots of war, seen lots of bloodshed and the ravaging of the countryside, and you live in that atmosphere all the time, the possibility of peace is a big thing. We're so accustomed to it here in Canada and the United States that we take it for granted like air.

But, if you live out there you don't take it for granted and you think that if there's a possibility of that it's just terrific. So, that we count on as the big objective and the more we can get that possibility up into people's minds and consciousness, the better chance, I think, we'll have of people being willing to make the compromises and take the chances and risks that they have to take if a peaceful resolution is to emerge.

Question: You responded that King Hassan did not say the Arab countries were prepared to recognise Israel, but only if Israel would move the boundaries would they recognise Israel.

Answer: Well, what people's perception of movement is, is always an interesting one. I think in the eyes of the Arabs; they have moved dramatically. That is, they've come together, they were all there at once, and King Hassan spoke of co-existence, he spoke of Resolution 242, 338, the president's peace initiative, and the Fez initiative as being the basis for peace. So, I don't know what other implication you can draw then that the Arabs accept the fact that Israel is there and that's a permanent part of the region. Now, the effort is to figure out how to make an arrangement that is peaceful with Israel. So, as they see it, they made a lot of movement and they have.

Question: Do you foresee some time when Mr. Reagan's plan will be different to what is on the table?

Answer: What we are working for is the emergence of another Arab leader, King Hussein, to join President Mubarak, ourselves and Mr. Begin in a discussion — bargaining you might say — negotiation. The

Spain prepares for papal visit and new government

MADRID (R) — As Spain prepared for its first papal visit Sunday, Spanish politicians took time off Saturday after a general election which swept the Socialists to power.

Prime Minister-elect Felipe Gonzalez, whose party became the first to win an absolute majority in parliament in post-Franco Spain, was out of Madrid.

Manuel Fraga went hunting to celebrate the emergence of his right-wing Popular Alliance Party as the country's second force.

Meanwhile, the Socialist Party prepared for the task of forming a government. The party's executive committee will meet on Tuesday to analyse the results of Thursday's election and name candidates as congress and senate speakers.

Parliament will convene within 25 days of the election, but procedural delays make Dec. 2 the earliest date for the new government to take office.

Pope John Paul will start his 10-day tour of Spain Sunday with a Madrid airport welcome from King Juan Carlos and the outgoing cabinet.

Socialist sources said Mr. Gonzalez would return to Madrid on Monday to oversee the handover of power from the outgoing government. He met Mr. Calvo Sotelo Friday night for 90 minutes after a cabinet meeting reviewed the results of the election, and will meet him again next week.

In the only serious incident reported following the election, suspected separatist guerrillas fired an anti-tank grenade at a Civil Guard barracks in the Basque port of Pasajes early Sunday. Police said the grenade missed and did not explode.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Warsaw bans American magazine

WARSAW (R) — Polish authorities have stopped distribution in Poland of an American magazine about life in the United States, marking a further worsening of Warsaw-Washington relations following the ban on the Solidarity free trade union. The official Polish news agency PAP said that the ban on Ameryka, a Polish-language magazine published by the U.S. government, was effective immediately.

Solzhenitsyn's epic chronicle on Russian revolution complete

NEW YORK (R) — Alexander Solzhenitsyn has completed his long awaited multi-volume chronicle of the Russian revolution that he has been working on for more than a decade in exile. His wife said. At a rare meeting with reporters, Mrs. Natalia Solzhenitsyn said the work, entitled Red Wheel, will be published as soon as its eight new volumes have been translated. The first volume of his chronicle August 1914 appeared in 1972 and was the last major novel to be issued by the Nobel Prize-winning author. Mrs. Solzhenitsyn said the world would be surprised by her husband's invention of what she called, without explaining, "a new literary technique." The technique is used in the last four volumes of the work.

Private vehicles banned in C. Athens on alternate days

ATHENS (R) — Private cars and lorries have been banned in the centre of Athens on alternate days to try to free the city from a poisonous cloud of pollution and ease traffic congestion. The ban, from 6.30 a.m. to 8.30 p.m., will come into force on Tuesday, a government official said Saturday. Vehicles with licence plate numbers ending from one to five will be allowed in one day and those with numbers from six to zero next day. The ban will be lifted for one month from Dec. 15 because of Christmas and New Year following complaints from traders that it would badly affect business.

Police question opposition politician in Sri Lanka

COLOMBO (R) — The runner-up in the Sri Lankan presidential elections last week, Hector Kobbekaduwa, has been questioned by police about an alleged plot to kill President Junius Jayewardene, a senior police officer said Saturday. The officer also confirmed newspaper reports that Mr. Kobbekaduwa had been questioned about fake rice ration cards alleged to have been distributed before the elections to confuse voters. The president told a meeting of his ruling United National Party (UNP) on Thursday that the opposition has planned to eliminate him, the prime minister, and others if it came to power.

'Cuba offered troops to Buenos Aires during Falklands'

BUEENOS AIRES (R) — Cuba offered Argentina 2,500 militiamen to help fight the British in the war over the Falklands, according to press reports of a book by former Argentine President Leopoldo Galtieri due to be published soon. The Buenos Aires daily La Voz said Mr. Galtieri declared in the book, entitled The Names of Defeat, that the offer was turned down as a result of right-wing pressure in the armed forces. La Voz said the book would be published next month. Gen. Galtieri, it added, repeatedly complains in the book that he was betrayed and let down by military commanders during the conflict.

ITU to elect consultative team

NAIROBI (R) — The International Telecommunication Union (ITU) has approved a resolution to elect directors of its consultative committees at the group's next plenipotentiary conference. The resolution, proposed by developing countries, was opposed mainly by western nations Friday night. It was adopted by 70 votes to 49 with five abstentions and six blank ballots.

Obote says Rwandans were not expelled

NAIROBI (R) — Ugandan President Milton Obote has said his government did not order the expulsion of thousands of Rwandan refugees and is prepared to help them return to their homes in Uganda.

In a statement broadcast by Radio Uganda, Mr. Obote expressed regret at the recent flight from the country of more than 30,000 Rwandans who said they had been driven from their homes.

The statement said there was no government approval for any uprooting of Rwandans from their homes in Uganda and described the recent events as unfortunate.

President Obote's statement was contained in a message to a special meeting of Uganda's western and southwestern district councils at Mbarara, 300 kilometres southwest of Kampala.

The radio said Public Service Minister Wilson Okwenje, who took part earlier this week in talks with Rwandan officials on the refugee crisis, delivered President Obote's statement.

The message instructed district councillors to tell their people that Uganda's constitution provides full protection and freedom for all residents, regardless of their nationality.

It also directed each council to identify refugees forced from their homes and help them to return if they wish to do so.

Some of the Rwandans who recently fled said they had lived in Uganda for more than 20 years.

The Uganda government has said that some of the refugees fled in panic after being accused of killing three Ugandans who were trying to trace stolen cattle.

More mass graves reported in Argentina

BUEENOS AIRES (R) — A second Buenos Aires cemetery contains unmarked graves of people killed by the armed forces, an Argentine mayor has said.

Abel Blas Roman, mayor of the satellite town of La Plata, was quoted by the newspaper La Nacion as saying an unspecified number of people killed in the armed forces "dirty war" against leftist guerrillas were among 295 unidentified persons buried in the municipal cemetery from 1976 to 1979.

It followed a statement by a judge Friday that records at Grand Bourg cemetery in Buenos Aires showed 156 unidentified people had been buried there since 1976, of whom 31 were listed as having been killed "in combat with the security forces."

Judge Hugo Gandara gave the information in a statement explaining his decision to pass the case to the federal justice department.

Several human rights groups initiated the judicial investigation last Friday, saying the unmarked sector contained the graves of about 400 people.

Reagan rules out 'quick-fix' economic solutions

WASHINGTON (R) — President Reagan Saturday rejected Democratic pleas to attack unemployment with a new economic programme, saying present policies were already pulling the nation out of recession.

In his regular Saturday afternoon radio broadcast, the last before next Tuesday's congressional elections, Mr. Reagan blamed the recession on past Democratic administrations and said he was not going to adopt "quick-fix" solutions which would only boost inflation.

Mr. Reagan's broadcast took the form of a reply to a letter from Democratic Senator Donald Riegle, whose state of Michigan has been particularly hard hit by unemployment in the car industry.

Senator Riegle said Mr. Reagan should change his economic programme—the major campaign issue—before it triggered more "destruction and human suffering."

The president said his policies had been in effect only 13 months, following a major tax cut, and were already showing results in combating inflation and high interest rates.

He said his administration had given Americans their first real tax cut since the time of President John Kennedy.

President Reagan said the present 10.1 per cent unemployment rate would be reduced by his new programme to train workers for many existing vacancies in skilled trades.

The president turned down Mr. Riegle's call for a major public works programme to provide jobs, saying similar schemes had failed in the past seven recessions.

He commented: "All we got from that spending was a temporary quick fix, followed by more inflation and then another recession, usually deeper than the one before."

Mr. Reagan was also challenged by Democratic Senator Edward Kennedy, who urged Americans to ask themselves before voting: "Are you better off today than you were two years ago?"

He said in a pre-election radio address there were too few Democrats in Congress to fight the president's economic policies, which favoured the rich at the expense of the poor.

Senator Kennedy added that a democratic vote meant support for a nuclear weapons freeze and equal rights for women and minorities.
